President's Message

CHRISTINE SPATARA, President

A few weeks ago, I found myself in Dublin having finished a private literary tour of Irish Writers with an Irishman who had an in-depth knowledge of Irish literature and history. You can never say enough about such literary giants as Oscar Wilde, WB Yeats, James Joyce, Samuel Becket , George Bernard Shaw and many others. We finished our tour at the Dublin Writers Museum which, despite it's small size, could easily take a week to explore.

The tour made me think of our goal as an organization: FAW helps writers realize their dreams. Even if we only play a small part, our encouragement can inspire another Wilde or a Yeats. Genius flourishes around us, just waiting to be recognized. ■

NOVEMBER PROGRAM

Susanna Calkins, mystery writer and author of The Speak- easy Series presents

Flappers, Cocktails and Temperance— True Stories of Prohibition

By TAMMIE BOB
Program Chair

About the Author

Susanna Calkins has a PhD in history and teaches at Northwestern University when she's not writing engaging mysteries. Join her in solving this exciting adventure! Join us for the FAW luncheon on Wednesday, November 13, at 12:00 noon.

Flappers, bootleggers and gangsters, cocktails and speakeasies—these are the common images of Prohibition. But what led to Prohibition? What was its impact?

At our November luncheon, Susanna Calkins, historian and author of the historical Speakeasy Mysteries, will share insights into the paradoxes of Prohibition on the eve of its hundred-year anniversary. She will explain how the illicit alcohol trade impacted society, culture, and daily life in Chicago throughout the "Roaring Twenties."

Ms. Calkins is the author of The Lucy Campione mysteries about a 17th century London chambermaid turned printer's apprentice who solves a series of grisly murders. Ms. Calkins' new series, which begins with Murder Knocks Twice, tells the story of Gina Ricci, who takes on a job as a cigarette girl to earn money for her ailing father and to prove to herself that she can hold her own at Chicago's most notorious speakeasy, the Third Door. She is enchanted by the harsh, but glamorous, world she discovers: the sleek socialites sipping bootlegged cocktails, the rowdy ex-soldiers playing poker in a curtained back room, the flirtatious jazz pianist, and the brooding photographer—all overseen by the club's imposing owner, Signora Castallazzo. When Gina arrives, the staff is whispering about her predecessor, who died under mysterious circumstances. The club photographer, Marty, heightens tensions when he warns Gina to be careful.

But it is Marty who should have heeded his own admonition. Early in the story, Marty is brutally murdered. Since Gina is the only witness to the murder, she is determined to track down his killer. She wonders what secrets Marty captured on his camera, and who would do anything to destroy these secrets? As Gina searches for answers, she's pulled deeper into the shadowy truths hiding behind the Third Door. Come to the presentation on November 13, and as the famous fictional detective Hercule Poirot is fond of saying, "All will be revealed." ■ with suspicion. Games and sports were prohibited. Cards and dice were especially condemned because of the gambling element in them, and gambling was banned by law. Stage plays and dancing between men and women were frowned upon. Shufle board was not allowed because it was considered an idle game that caused young people to waste precious time. Likewise swimming was thought to be a waste of time. As for children playing with toys, the Puritans were not favorably disposed toward that activity. Although toys were sold in New England, they were expensive and available only in a very small quantity.

But no one can exist solely without pleasure, and even the Puritans had their diversions. Thus, Thanksgiving. The first harvest at the Plymouth Colony was a disappointment. The wheat, barley, peas, and other things planted with seeds brought from England came to nothing, either from "...ye badness of ye seed, or lateness of the season, or both, or some other defeete," according to Governor William Bradford. Still, the harvest did enable the Puritans to increase the colonists' rations to a peck of meal a week

THERE is a lot we don't know about the first Thanksgiving, celebrated in the Plymouth Colony in 1621. This is because historians, who get their information from primary sources, have had to rely on only two eyewitness accounts of the event. We do know that such a celebration was a rare event. In New England, the pursuit of pleasure was looked upon per person. To this was now added, a peck of corn, thanks to the Wampanoag Indians and their chief, Massasoit. Bradford decided this was cause for celebration. He sent four men out to kill wild fowl so that he could hold a feast for the members of his little colony. The men brought back enough to supply the settlement for a week. It seemed only right to invite the Indian chief Massasoit and his people, without whose assistance the colony would not have survived. Massasoit came with ninety brightly painted braves. He also brought five deer and other good things from the fields and forest.

The gala occasion was not limited to food. Colonists and Native Americans engaged in games of chance and skill. Afterwards, they gorged themselves on venison, duck, goose, clams and other shellfish, smoked eels, corn breads, leeks, watercress, and other greens. For dessert, they served up wild plums and dried berries. They washed it all down with wine made from wild grapes of the region. The celebration went on for three days and was proclaimed a great success.

Setting aside a day to celebrate the harvest caught on in other parts of the young nation. The first Thanksgiving in Boston was held on February 22, 1630, to show gratitude for the safe arrival of ships from England bringing food and additional settlers. The next year Thanksgiving Day was held on November 4. As time went on, it became a New England tradition and was even carried West by restless Yankees searching for more land. By 1684, no fewer than twenty-two days were designated in Massachusetts for giving thanks.

By the President of the United States of America: A Proclamation.

The year that is drawing towards its close, has been filled with the blessings of fruitful fields and healthful skies. To these bounties, which are so constantly enjoyed that we are prone to forget the source from which they come, others have been added, which are of so extraordinary a nature, that they cannot fail to penetrate and soften even the heart which is habitually insensible to the ever watchful providence of Almighty God. In the midst of a civil war of unequalled magnitude and severity, which has sometimes seemed to foreign States to invite and to provoke their aggression, peace has been preserved with all nations, order has been maintained, the laws have been respected and obeyed, and harmony has prevailed everywhere except in the theatre of military conflict; while that theatre has been greatly contracted by the advancing armies and navies of the Union. Needful diversions of wealth and of strength from the fields of peaceful industry to the national defence, have not arrested the plough, the shuttle, or the ship; the axe has enlarged the borders of our settlements, and the mines, as well of iron and coal as of the precious metals, have yielded even more abundantly than heretofore. Population has steadily increased, notwithstanding the waste that has been made in the camp, the siege and the battlefield; and the country, rejoicing in the consciousness of augmented strength and vigor, is permitted to expect continuance of years with large increase of freedom. No human counsel hath devised nor hath any mortal hand worked out these great things. They are the gracious gifts of the Most High God, who, while dealing with us in anger for our sins, hath nevertheless remembered mercy. It has seemed to me fit and proper that they should be solemnly, reverently and gratefully acknowledged as with one heart and one voice by the whole American People. I do therefore invite my fellow citizens in every part of the United States, and also those who are at sea and those who are sojourning in foreign lands, to set apart and observe the last Thursday of November next, as a day of Thanksgiving and Praise to our beneficent Father who dwelleth in the Heavens. And I recommend to them that while offering up the ascriptions justly due to Him for such singular deliverances and blessings, they do also, with humble penitence for our national perverseness and disobedience, commend to His tender care all those who have become widows, orphans, mourners or sufferers in the lamentable civil strife in which we are unavoidably engaged, and fervently implore the interposition of the Almighty Hand to heal the wounds of the nation and to restore it as soon as may be consistent with the Divine purposes to the full enjoyment of peace, harmony, tranquility and Union.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington, this Third day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, and of the Independence of the United States the Eighty-eighth.

—By the President: Abraham Lincoln

Shop till you drop

The idea of an annual day of celebration was not limited to having a good crop. It could commemorate a victory over the Indians, the success of the Protestants over the Catholics in Germany, the crowning of a new king, the ending of epidemics, and the suppression of pirates. Nor was Thursday the only day on which Thanksgiving was observed. One year it was held on a Tuesday, another on Wednesday, and so on. Colonist John Cotton wrote, “We sometimes, upon extraordinary occasions or of notable judgments, do set apart a day of humiliation, or upon special mercies we set apart a day of Thanksgiving.”

As the Thanksgiving holiday evolved, it became a day for family and friends to come together and give thanks for their blessings. The feast was an integral part of the day and became more elaborate in good times—less so in hard times. Certain foods, some part of that first Thanksgiving, others added later, were associated with the meal: turkey, squashes, corn, berries (cranberries), dressing (or stuffing), various vegetables, and pumpkin pie.

Although it was celebrated, Thanksgiving did not become a fixed annual observance until 1863 when President Abraham Lincoln proclaimed the first national Thanksgiving and decreed that it should be observed on the last Thursday in November. Federal offices were closed, as were many businesses. But the great god profit would not be ignored. Commercial establishments began opening after the meal was concluded and offering “door busters”—desirable items at ridiculously low prices to lure customers in. The sports world also saw this as a day to lure viewers to their television sets with contests between popular teams.

So will you be feasting and shopping, feasting and binge watching, or feasting and feasting and feasting? However you choose to celebrate your Thanksgiving, this year on November 23, you might give a nod to those “fun loving” Puritans who made this day possible by putting aside their serious sides long enough to relax and give thanks for the good things they had been granted.
